INTRODUCTION

Apart from the names mentioned in the charters, the earliest lists of those admitted to the Levant Company are those in the Minute Books of the General Court of the Company, which are in The National Archives (TNA), series SP 105/147-156, but I have not yet had an opportunity to study all of these. There are ten volumes, which cover the years 1611 to 1706. For compactness, I denote these by the lower-case letters a to j, as follows:

a:147	1611-1617	f:152	1660-1669
b:148	1617-1631	g:153	1669-1676
c:149	1631-1640	h:154	1676-1685
d:150	1640-1648	i:155	1685-1699
e:151	1648-1660	j:156	1699-1706

Using these records, Brenner [p.70, n.52] counted a total of 372 admissions between 1611 and 1640; by apparently including those named in charters, he reckoned that more than 500 merchants were admitted in the first forty years of the seventeenth century. His book gives a considerable amount of detail about the links between early members of the company, in terms of business and marriage. Rabb [p.90, table 9] gives the number of admissions in individual years from 1611 to 1629. Like Brenner's figures, these indicate that, on average, there were about 13 or 14 admissions per year in the first half of the seventeenth century. It seems that both Brenner and Rabb only counted the number of admissions to the freedom of the Company. My list includes the names of those granted liberty of trade, many of whom later obtained their freedom. In the early years at least, there was a rule that this liberty was granted only to sons or apprentices of freemen of the Company and the Minute Books usually include the names of the father or master. An exception was made when a grant was made in 1700 to "Widdow Marsh"; her husband may have been Robert Marsh whose name is in a list of freemen in 1676.

The present list contains some information from the last two of these early Minute Books, but is mainly based on my own transcription of the various records in the two volumes of Registers of Orders from the General Court of the Levant Company (TNA reference SP 105/332 and SP 105/333, which I have designated as A and B respectively). These cover the period 1698 to 1824 and include about 1500 names. Unfortunately, some of the records are rather carelessly written, so that the reading of a few names and dates is uncertain. For dates before 1752, I have adjusted the start of the year to be 1 January. Entries marked LT refer to liberty of trade, all the others to freedom.

The first list in Register A, which was apparently entered there early in 1702, shows those admitted to the Company and granted liberty of trade since 26 June 1698 – without giving individual dates. However, dates for all except eight of these admissions and grants are given in the last Minute Book, which also includes several other entries for dates between June 1698 and March 1702. By including some material from the second-last Minute Book, I have extended the record back to the beginning of 1695, so that it covers 130 years. It appears from the Minute Books that at one time there was a separate Book of Admissions, but this has not survived.

The dates shown in my list are those given in the source document indicated (A or B, i or j, as explained above); they are usually those of the meetings of the Company's General Court in London at which it was agreed to confer freedom or liberty of trade. However, different dates have been quoted in other sources – in particular, Hyde Clarke's article about the British colony at Smyrna which appears to be based on local records held at Smyrna. Where Clarke gives exact dates these are often several months ahead of the London ones (suggesting a local conferral) or several months behind (suggesting a delay in receiving information from London). He also gives five entries which I cannot match in SP 105/333: John Charnaud (1804), Thomas Hucknell (1790), James Lee (1791), Francis Peter Werry (1809) and John James A. Werry (1820). Obviously therefore, some caution is needed in interpreting my present list – as regards both completeness and dating.

The means of obtaining freedom of the Company were similar to those used by the Livery Companies of London: patrimony (being the son of a freeman), servitude (completing an apprenticeship to a freeman), or redemption (by payment of a fee). On rare occasions the freedom was also conferred upon distinguished men such as the naval hero Horatio Nelson (admitted 1801). Originally, an applicant was required to be a merchant and freeman of London, but in 1753 an act of Parliament opened access to all British subjects, including Jews and those who had been naturalized [Wood, p.156]. Over the next few years many Swiss and German merchants took advantage of this and obtained their freedom shortly after naturalization [Beerbühl]. Others who had bought shares in the Bank of Scotland to obtain British nationality had their freedom withdrawn [Vlami, pp.47-48] and I have shown where their names were deleted in the Register.

For most purposes, readers will find it convenient to consult the first version of the list, where the names are arranged in alphabetic order. However I have also included a second version, where the same material is presented in the date-order of the original entries. This is to facilitate comparison with the source documents for those who wish to check doubtful readings or to establish when members of a particular family or business associates were admitted together.

Where a precise date was not shown I have indicated that of a neighbouring entry prefixed by "aft" (after) or "bef" (before).
